Daughter of slain man heading home

• Family members describe murdered traveller as a vivacious, intelligent man who loved his family

A young woman who witnessed her father's murder onboard his boat in Central America was returning home yesterday.

Myda Egrmajer's cousin said the 24year-old woman was travelling from Belize to her mother's home in northern Ontario. Other family members were gathering there to await her return, Marian Hester said.

The small family and community are shaken, she said: "It's a little surreal."

Myda, originally from Ottawa, had been visiting her father Milan on his boat in Honduras when they hit bad weather on Thursday and docked at a remote lagoon called El Diamante, which is known to boaters in the area as a place to overnight.

It's not clear what unfolded next, but Milan Egrmajer's body was found inside the boat by authorities on Friday.

Honduran authorities said his body had four bullet wounds to the chest and abdomen Honduran media were reporting yesterday that Myda was hidden from view as four men stormed the boat and robbed her father at gunpoint.

But Hester says the story of how she escaped is Myda's alone to tell.

"She is a fighter, obviously," said Hester. "So is Milan." THE CANADIAN PRESS

"Students get a much deeper understanding of what actually took place," he said.

For the 2012 tour, hundreds of Canadian students will travel to Europe and be assigned a soldier from the First or Second World War to study where they were from, where they fought, and where they died.

Jewel fraud bust nets charges

An Ottawa woman faces 15 charges after the Canada Border Services Agency, Ottawa police and the RCMP shut down a fraudulent jewelry business.

In February 2008, the CB-SA intercepted a shipment from China with more than 100 pieces of undeclared jewelry. The CBSA officers later determined that shipments had entered Canada on several other occasions.

An investigation found that the suspect and a network of sales associates were selling the jewelry through parties at private residences, businesses, the Internet and local shopping mall kiosks.

A search of the suspect's home revealed close to 3,000 pieces of fraudulent jewelry, sold under the brand name Tiffany and Co.

Debbie Craddock, 41, of Ottawa is charged with seven offences under the Criminal Code, three offences under the Copyright Act and five offences under the Customs Act related to smuggling, distribution and sale of fraudulent jewelry, as well as designer handbags.

Sean Craddock, 42, also faces two Criminal Code charges. a TRACEY TONG

City to mark Montreal massacre

ANNIVERSARY. The City of Ottawa will lower its flags to half-mast from sunrise to sunset today as residents mark a sad anniversary and remember female victims of violence.

Twenty-one years ago, a gunman killed 14 women at Montreal's Ecole Polytechnique on Dec. 6, now observed as National Day of Remembrance and Action on Violence Against Women.

An outdoor vigil at the Women's Monument in Minto Park (Elgin at Gilmour) will begin at 6 p.m., followed by an indoor vigil at All Saints Westboro and First United Church at 347 Richmond Rd.

The theme of this year's indoor vigil is "Daring to Hope Togethor"

Now for something completely useless

• After four decades of drawing, a local artist launches his new book

Many people wouldn't want their art to be called absurd and useless. But that's how Ottawa's Mark Adshead classifies his work.

"I do surreal humour and absurd humour," he said. "I define myself as an absurdist. And there's an appeal in something that's useless.

After 40 years of drawing in Ottawa, Adshead is releasing his long-awaited first book of art — A Total-ly Useless Book but Absolutely Essential for the Person Who Has Everything - at a combined launch and gallery show-

"There are two ways to see the world — logically and absurdly," said Adshead, "and I tend to see it more absurdly."

Adshead adds that there are pros and cons to this: While he can be "my best audience," other times, it's an obsession.

The Ottawa artist, who started out in photography, came to the city to work with the National Film Board. While they were interested in his work, he struck out on his own, becoming one of the pioneer "funny card" de-signers for Hallmark Cards.

After years of people encouraging him to put out a book, he has, and it's been a dream come true, he said. @ TRACEY TONG

Saudi Arabia drops ball on terror funding

◆ Taliban gets more funding from Gulf donors than drug trade ◆ Saudi officials sluggish in cracking down

Saudi Arabia has made "important progress" in aggressively trying to curtail the flow of funds to terrorist groups, but the oil-rich kingdom and its Gulf Arab neighbours still remain major sources of financing for militant movements like al-Qaida and the Taliban, according to leaked U.S. government documents.

The findings, detailed in a series of internal U.S. diplomatic cables spanning a period of several years, paint a stark picture of Washington's challenges in convincing key allies of the need to clamp down on terror funding, much of which is believed to stem from private donors in those nations.

But the cables, obtained and released by WikiLeaks, also offer a window into the delicate balancing act Gulf governments must perform in cracking down on extremist sympathizers while not running afoul of religious charitable duties and casting themselves as U.S. stooges before an increasingly skeptical populace.

ingly skeptical populace.
"While the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia (KSA) takes seriously the threat of terrorism within Saudi Arabia. it has been an ongoing challenge to persuade Saudi officials to treat terrorist financing emanating from Saudi Arabia as a strategic priority," reads a December 2009 memo from Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton

The cable said that while the kingdom has begun to "make important progress on this front, ... donors in Saudi Arabia constitute the most significant source of funding to Sunni terrorist groups worldwide."

Saudi Arabia, the homeland of most of the Sept. 11 hijackers, has repeatedly come under fire from the U.S. for its sluggish response to cracking down on terror financing. It has also been criticized for its reluctance to confront the fiery rhetoric espoused by some of its hardline clerics which is seen as either directly or indirectly fuelling extremism. NATO and Afghan forces are on the move in western Kandahar in what could be one of the last big pushes involving Canadian troops before the combat mission ends next summer.

A large combined assault group of Canadian, American and Afghan troops are headed into a longstanding Taliban redoubt, a restive area known as the Horn of Panjwaii.

The arid patch of farmland has been fought over for years; taken, retaken several times and abandoned as coalition forces struggled to hold the region with only a few thousand soldiers.

Harper signs off on decried event costs

Stephen Harper approved a $7,400 tab for "refreshments" for public servants about three months before his government announced a crackdown on hospitality expenses.

Harper's signature appears on an Aug. 26 approval form asking him to endorse the refreshment expense from a Privy Council Office meeting, the prime minister's own department.

The so-called town hall meeting was held the morning of Sept. 13 at the Westin Hotel in Ottawa, where a meeting room for the affair cost taxpayers about $5,000 an hour.

Town halls for Privy

Town halls for Privy Council Office staff were inaugurated by the Conservatives in 2006 and have risen in cost over the years from $19,000 to $42,000, the bill for the latest gathering.

Documents with the meetings' costs were obtained by The Canadian Press under the Access to Information Act.

The Conservatives' 2009 federal budget put a twoyear freeze on spending for travel, conferences and hospitality in all departments, holding those expenses to 2008-2009 levels.

Last month, Treasury Board President Stockwell Day tightened the restrictions, with tougher government-wide rules effective for 2011.

At a news conference to provide an example of improper hospitality spending, Day gave an example of reception that cost $31,500 for several hundred people. An aide later explained that Day was referring to a 2005, Statistics Canada reception — under the previous Liberal government — that cost $31,674 for about 400 people.

The Statistics Canada event, in fact, was similar in scale to the $47,158 budgeted by the Privy Council Office for the Sept. 13 town hall, intended for some 600 public servants.

Answers in French plane crash

A decade after a supersonic Concorde jet crashed in a fiery wreck outside Paris soon after takeoff, killing 113 people, a French court will rule today on who, if anyone, is to blame.

The trial that started in February in Pontoise, northwest of Paris, reopened questions over whether European engineers — or American company, Continental Airlines — was responsible for the July 2000 crash of the European jet.

In the years it took French judicial investigators to work their way to trial, amassing 80,000 pages of court documents, the Concordes were revamped, retired and sent to museums. Victims' families and aviation experts will be watching the verdict closely. Some in the industry fear the high-profile trial will discourage aviation officials from freely sharing safety information, fearing what they disclose might be used to prosecute them.

French judicial and aviation investigators concluded long ago that a Continental Airlines DC-10 dropped titanium debris onto the runway at Charles de Gaulle airport before the Air France Concorde took off — a metal strip that gashed the supersonic jet's tire and sent rubber pieces flying into the fuel tanks, causing a fire.

Gun marking regulations delayed again

New regulations could make the difference between a firearm trace taking hours versus months

The Harper government has once again delayed implementation of regulations that police say they need to quickly trace guns used in crimes.

The government quietly posted a notice last Tuesday — one day before the firearms marking regulations were to have come into force — disclosing that implementation has been postponed until Dec. 1, 2012.

This is the third time the Harper government has delayed the regulations, which were created by the Liberal government in 2004 and were supposed to go into effect in April of 2006.

They are supposed to bring Canada into compliance with international protocols requiring import marks on all firearms.

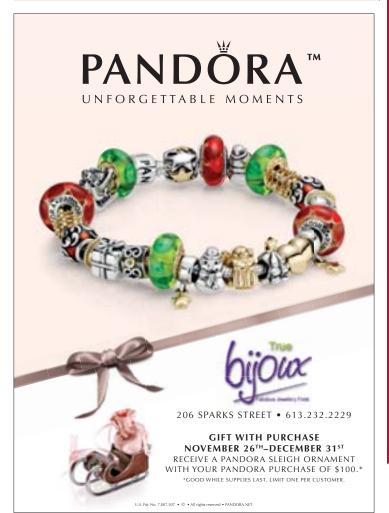

The government has also deferred regulations governing the possession and use of firearms at gun shows.

The latest deferrals are being applauded by gun enthusiasts, who hope the regulations will be repeatedly put off until Harper's Conservatives win a majority and can scrap them altogether.

The Canadian Shooting Sports Association sent out an alert last week that it has been "working tirelessly" to delay both sets of regulations. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Gun marking

- Back in 2007, just before the Harper government postponed the firearms marking regulations for a second time, the three national associations representing police in Canada joined forces to plead for implementation.
- Current laws state that all firearms must have a serial number, or firearms identification number, according to the ministry of public safety.
- The new regulations would require firearm manufacturers to include a marking that would indicate the origin of the firearm.

It was a minor slip, and at any rate, the mayor correctly pointed out that while evidence is disturbing, the SIU is investigating, and we should let them get on with it. (My take: Most of us acknowledge that policing is a tough job and we can quibble about the statistical prominence of bad apples, but when we start recognizing certain cops in those cellblock videos, we've probably got a problem.)

The inauguration itself still featured plenty of traditional trappings, the mayor decked out in his chain of office and a fur-lined robe, and, councillors in academic-style black gowns, all led on and off the stage by a bagpiper like so many haggises.

But Watson made a couple of well-publicized changes, moving the ceremony out to the Shenkman Arts Centre in Orleans to send a message that this mayor's aware of the whole city, not just the environs of his Laurier Avenue office, and ditching the $25,000 wine and catering budget for coffee and cookies from Tim Hortons as a show of austerity.

This, however, was all pregame show. It's when the gavel comes down Wednesday on the first meeting of this new council that you'll begin to see what sort of change you voted for.

Katy Perry loves a man in a uniform.

The pop superstar met dozens of service members while working on the special VH1 Divas Salute the Troops this weekend near San Diego.

"There was a kid who I met backstage who was rather chatty, but adorable," Perry recalled. "He was really sweet. He was 19. He had such a good heart. He said, 'Yes, ma'am' to me. 'Yes ma'am' to me. 'Yes, ma'am!' I was like, 'OK! Yes, sir!'"

A VH1 publicist estimated an audience of 27,000 attended the nearly threehour taping of the concert Friday night at the Marine Corps Air Station in Miramar. The show, which aired last night, featured a bounty of what the network has dubbed divas female or female-lead musical acts, including established stars such as Heart. Paramore and Sugarland, as well as hot newcomers Grace Potter and The Nocturnals. Keri Hilson and Nicki Minaj. But if one diva emerged supreme, it was Perry, who both opened and closed the show, and performed solo or with others on a halfdozen songs - twice that of anyone else in the linedriven by his father with the help of special shoes featuring a suspension system.

Stunt goes wrong Contestant injured on popular German television show Dieber promises to return

Canadian teen idol Justin Bieber missed an appearance on one of Germany's top-rated television shows as it was cut short by a stunt that went terribly wrong.

The 16-year-old Bieber later said on his Twitter ac-count: "Please pray for Samuel Koch & his family as we wait and hope for his health and safety.

The singer added on Twitter he felt sorry for not performing in Germany, but "some things are more important than putting on a show. We will holiday season many families are take itable gift giv lies are taking part in chargiving to Whether it's donating an animal to another family on the other side of the world to provide food or for breeding, or materials that might help to fund an education for a child, the act is not only helpful to the one who receives it, but to who gives it as well. The holidays serve as the perfect time to teach children about giving.

what we do, so a lot of it is just modeling it and making it part of our family culture," says Alyson Shafer, a parenting expert, author and host of The Parenting Show.

Shafer suggests that parents might also introduce the gift of giving if they're worrying about their children's selfishness. "When kids are saying 'I want a Wii! I want a Nintendo! I want a bike!' Parents might like to say, 'What about others?'"

Shafer donates to charities in her children's names every year, looking for something fun and easy for them to understand. Last year, she donated chickens, and a card under her Christmas tree was enough to make her children happy for the cause. Shafer also asks that she has a gift donated in her name from them.

If you're looking to engage your family in charitable gift giving this month, there are plenty of outlets.

Free the Children, Canada's Most Meaningful Gifts, Gifts That Matter, Unicef, Heifer, Oxfam and Plan Canada are some that offer animals, healthcare, education and shelter. More targeted organizations include WaterCan's Gifts of Water, the David Suzuki Foundation and World Wildlife Fund.

Plan Canada did a survey of 1,000 Canadians in October and November, finding that 89 per cent of those participants believe that it's important for children to learn to help others and 59 per cent use the holidays as a time to acknowledge such.

"When you think about the ethical giving side, giving a gift that has a story behind it has a narrative that connects us with somebody on the other side of the planet in a meaningful way," says Rosemary McCarney, CEO and president of Plan Canada.

"I think that those are great opportunities for parents and children to have a very different conversation... It allows for much richer conversation about poverty and inequalities and social justice than you can have if you're talking about another pair of slippers or a hockey stick."

Filling/Topping Ideas:

Cranberry and Brie

Fill or top scones with a dollop of cranberry sauce, thinly sliced brie and fresh watercress or baby arugula.

Pour milk into mixture and stir gently with a wooden spoon until mixture just comes together to form dough. Turn dough over a few times to gather up any remaining bits of flour. Dough should not be sticky. If it is, add a bit more flour.

Transfer dough to a floured cutting board and divide into 4 equal pieces. Working quickly, using your hands, shape each piece into a round flat disk, about 2 cm (3/4 inch) thick. Cut each disk into 8 evensized wedges. Arrange on a parchment-lined baking sheet. Brush tops with milk. Sprinkle with finely chopped walnuts.

○ Computer gamers take on a new battle: saving Earth from climate change ○ Fate of the World leaves 200 years to save or wreck the planet

In most video games, "saving the Earth" means fighting off an alien invasion. But Fate of the World, the upcoming ecoconscious game from UK developers Red Redemption, has other ideas.

In this new strategy game, players are given 200 years to stop severe global warming by any means, from alternative energy sources, making policy decisions to destroying countries.

Game director Matt Miles Griffiths warns of drastic consequences: "Computer gamers might think that wiping out the U.S. would solve some problems, but the loss of food production alone will send the world's economy into a tailspin. And you run the risk of being tried as a war criminal..."

Based on scientific data, the PC game – to be released February 2011 – shows how the world's economic, environmental and political problems are interlinked. But it's not a dry textbook; here are four crazy yet possible scenarios:

Question: What's the deal with soap nuts? I love that I can avoid plastic packaging by using them, but what are they actually made of? Are they natural and biodegradable? Or are they just condensed detergent? Julie from Calgary, Alberta oap nuts are a natural, biodegradable and petroleum-free laundry soap alternative. They grow on trees in Nepal and India, but they're not nuts; they're actually a fruit. You might also see them sold as soapberries. The tree itself is from the genus Sapindus. (Think back to biology class.)

Soap nuts contain

Soap nuts contain large amounts of saponins in their shells, which are a natural surfactant. Surfactants are compounds that lower the surface tension of a liquid, and so can be used as detergents or foaming agents. You can find soap nuts in many health food stores, organic grocers or online. All you do is add four or five of them, in a small cloth bag, to a load of dirty laundry. You can reuse that pouch of soap nuts for a few loads

My favourite solution for eco-friendly laundry soap is making my own liquid version from borax, washing soda and soap granules.

See my recipe and complete do-it-yourself video at davidsuzuki.org. It only takes about 20 minutes to make a batch that will last you about a month and cost only a dollar a litre.

I prefer the liquid recipe to powdered versions because it works well in cold water, saving even more money on utility bills.

Another tip is to add about ½ a cup of baking soda to boost your whites instead of chlorine bleach. Don't think you have the DIV gene in you?

Don't axe office party

Experts say companies should honour staff at holidays, not cancel festivities Despite tough times, parties are important for staff morale

The Royal Family may be toasting the impending nuptials of Prince William and Kate Middleton, but it's decidedly less festive for Buckingham Palace staffers heading into the holidays.

The Queen decided to cancel the annual Christmas fete because of "difficult financial circumstances" facing the nation.

It's been a similar story for some companies on this side of the Atlantic that either scaled back or axed holiday parties in recent years.

Pam McCarthy, owner of Calgary-based Five Star Events, said those who cancelled their parties in 2009 either aren't having one this year or are forging ahead on a smaller scale.

"Instead of having a fullblown party, they'll have a cocktail hour after work just for the staff only, that kind of thing," she said. "They'll bring in hors d'oeuvres and not have a big dinner for the staff plus the guests."

Tiff Daniels is director of sales with Canadian Outback Adventures & Events in Vancouver. The company designs and produces team-building initiatives and experiential learning events.

Daniels recalled that in 2008, some companies cancelled events even though they'd paid in full because they were part of a larger organization that didn't want one division having a party while others hadn't booked anything — and now couldn't have one.

"I think people realize after not doing any teambuilding events, or meetings or incentives for a good year or so, that that was affecting morale at various companies, and they realized that this was important to the productivity of their staff."

Although the country is no longer in the grip of a recession, it hasn't been an easy year for some companies, and hiring isn't back to what it was, said Workopolis content manager Peter Harris.

"A lot of companies are still feeling like now is not the time to throw a big, lavish party, but it is important for employee morale that something does happen. That's my theory.'

An online poll conducted by Workopolis between Nov. 26 and Dec. 1 asked respondents whether it was important that their company hold a holiday party. Among more than 2,400 people, 71 per cent thought it was important or somewhat important that businesses hold a festive event. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Science in the kitchen

World-famous chefs distill complex scientific concepts into everyday language at Harvard

Dan Barber's culinary skills have earned him a James Beard Outstanding Chef award. The food at his New York restaurant, Blue Hill, was also the centrepiece for a Manhattan date night between President Barack Obama and his wife Michelle.

Yet it's his focus on cultivating flavour before foodstuffs even reach his kitchen that recently put him in an unusual setting.

Trading his chef's whites for a loosened tie and sport coat, Barber stood in the well of a Harvard University science hall, delivering a guest lecture as part of the hottest course on campus this fall: Physical Universe 27, or Science and Cooking: From Haute Cuisine to Soft Matter Science.

As part of the course,

As part of the course, top chefs from around the world, including the current master of the gastronomic universe, Ferran Adria, chef/owner of Spain's famed elBulli restaurant, have attempted to explain how physics and other sciences influence their cooking.

They've also shown that their cooking, in Adria's case often labelled "molecular gastronomy," can illustrate scientific feats such as spherification, gelation and oxidation. One of Adria's signature dishes is warm—but, seemingly miraculously, not melted—ice cream. His trick is the additive methylcellulose, a gum that solidifies when it warms rather than cools.

Not exactly a pantry staple, but that's sort of the point.

The goal is to teach science in new and interesting ways, part of the university's effort to revamp its general education offerings. The target audience is not just history majors seeking to satisfy curriculum distribution requirements, but budding scientists with an equal passion for food.

Hundreds of students competed for the 300 spots in the course, and hundreds more have lined up early on recent Mondays to attend guest lectures.

They have been delivered by Barber, Adria and other famed chefs such as Grant Achatz of Alinea in Chicago, Jose Andres of Jaleo in Washington and David Chang of Momofuku in New York.

"Everything that I celebrate in the kitchen, and that I am celebrated for, actually begins here," Barber said during his lecture, aptly titled Cultivating Flavour.

The course grew from a lecture Adria delivered two years ago. Harvard's interest in reinvigorating its general education curriculum dovetailed with work the chef does through his Alicea Foundation to spread knowledge of food and science.

Gay teens bullied at school: Study

▶ Homophobic attitudes create social barriers ▶ But many schools are turning a blind eye to harassment

David Jason was in Grade 4 when the bullying began.

His self-described feminine mannerisms and "high, squeaky" voice attracted the attention of his classmates who began to ask him why he was gay.

By Grade 6, those classmates had graduated to hurling homophobic slurs, with "faggot" being the most common.

The next two years saw Jason's enthusiasm for academics wane under the stress of escalating verbal taunts and occasional physical harassment from peers.

He transferred to a school well outside his Toronto neighbourhood in the hope of getting a fresh start, but encountered only new tormentors and staff who turned a blind eye when he was heckled or shoved into lockers.

When a vice-principal urged him to transfer to the Triangle Program, a Toronto high school catering solely to lesbian, gay, bisexual, queer and transgendered youth, he was apathetic.

"I was suffering so much from a depression that I was thinking, 'Fine, I may as well go, because there at least I can be hated for something other than being gay,'" he said. The move proved a turn-

The move proved a turning point for Jason, who credits the school for restoring his confidence and helping him accept his bisexuality. Still, he deplores the necessity for such a program and the mainstream school system that has allowed homophobia to flourish.

New research suggests Jason's experience is far from unique. A study from gay rights activist organization Egale Canada and the University of Winnipeg found gay and straight students alike witnessed similar bullying in their high schools on a daily basis.

The study, which surveyed 3,600 secondary school students across Canada, found nearly half of respondents reported hearing homophobic slurs on a daily basis.

Of the 14 per cent of students who identified as LGBTQ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, trans or queer), two-thirds said they did not feel safe in their school environment and 51 per cent said they had been verbally harassed over their sexual orientation. More than a fifth of LGBTQ respondents said they had been physically bullied.
